

EditorialImmune Networks in Health and DiseaseHeung Kyu Lee and Doo Hyun Chung* 279Minireviews*Distinct Features of Brain-Resident Macrophages: Microglia and Non-Parenchymal Brain MacrophagesEunju Lee, Jun-Cheol Eo, Changjun Lee, and Je-Wook Yu* 281Development and Functions of Alveolar MacrophagesYeon Duk Woo, Dongjin Jeong, and Doo Hyun Chung* 292Innate Lymphoid Cells in Tissue Homeostasis and Disease PathogenesisJihyun Kim, Seungwon Ryu, and Hye Young Kim* 301Current Understanding of the Roles of CD1a-Restricted T Cells in the Immune SystemHyun Jung Yoo, Na Young Kim, and Ji Hyung Kim* 310Post-Translational Modifications in Transcription Factors that Determine T Helper Cell DifferentiationHyo Kyeong Kim, Mi Gyeong Jeong, and Eun Sook Hwang* 318MHC Multimer: A Molecular Toolbox for ImmunologistsJun Chang* 328Regulatory Role of Zinc in Immune Cell SignalingBonah Kim and Won-Woo Lee* 335MiT Family Transcriptional Factors in Immune Cell FunctionsSeongryong Kim, Hyun-Sup Song, Jihyun Yu, and You-Me Kim* 342The Role of Gut Microbiota in Modulating Tumor Growth and Anticancer Agent EfficacyJaeho Kim and Heung Kyu Lee* 356Clinical Perspectives to Overcome Acquired Resistance to Anti-Programmed Death-1 and Anti-Programmed Death Ligand-1 Therapy in Non-Small Cell Lung CancerYong Jun Lee, Jii Bum Lee, Sang-Jun Ha, and Hye Ryun Kim* 363COVER PICTURE

The immune system is an organic network of biological processes that protects the host from disease. Immune cells detect a wide variety of pathogens and responds with sophisticated mechanisms to maintain homeostasis. (Kim et al., pp. 301-309).